

South Georgia Medical Center Executive Earns Top Healthcare Management Credential

Valdosta, GA-- South Georgia Medical Center's Pam Cartwright recently became a Fellow of the American College of Healthcare Executives, FACHE, which is the nation's leading professional society for healthcare leaders. Ms. Cartwright serves as the Assistant Administrator for Clinical Services at South Georgia Medical Center. Becoming a Fellow of the American College of Healthcare Executives means one has achieved the highest standard of professional development. There are multiple requirements that must be fulfilled in order to attain this status these include: passing a comprehensive exam, meeting academic and experiential criteria, earning continuing education credentials and demonstrating professional/community involvement. Along with these criteria Fellows must commit to ongoing professional development and be recertified every three years. This distinction is only held by 7,500 out of more than 30,000 healthcare executives.

South Georgia Medical Center is privileged to have Cartwright as part of the team. Cartwright is responsible for day-to-day fiscal and operational management for clinical services. She provides leadership in a multi-skilled, multi-functional environment. The Fellow status of the ACHE is an honor for Cartwright showing her commitment to providing high-quality service to patients and the Valdosta community.
